Lobe Song FROM THE ITALIAN. BY RICHARD H' NRY WILDE O! WERT thou but with me, In you dark vessel free, That o'er the moon-lit sea Cleaves her way. O! were it only mine. From scenes in which we pine, To bear thee o'er the brine,

Far away! On ocean's ample breast, Beneath night's starry vest. All else but us at rest-Thou and I Of every mutual pain Tegether might complain, And unbetrayed remain, Thus lifting memory's pall From this dark life, all, all The past we should recall, With its woes: And then what could we crave From Heaven and the wave But a harbor or a grave, To repose!

Catholicism in Europe-England, &c.

The following is an extract of a Letter from President DURBIN, of Dickinsen College, Pa, (who is now traveling in Europe,) to Dr. SEW-ALL, published in the National Intelligencer. It states important facts, and evinces a clear and philosophic observation, which entitles it to atten-

I have carefully studied the Catholic religion, both as a system of faith considered in itself, and as an external institution acting upon society as such, and forming an integral and necessary part of the Government in Catholic countries. I have no doubt-no intelligent Protestant in Europe can doubt-but that Catholicism is gradually regaining its ground in Europe, under the direct or indirect patronage of most of the monarchies, because they find it a very convenient and powerful means of controlling the mass of the people through the priesthood. In Italy and Austria the clergy are in correspondence with the Bishops, and the Bishops with the Minister of Police. Louis Philippe and the Church had no friendship for each other seven years since; now they are in close alliance, and, with a returning sense of religion among the people of France, there is a corresponding return of the Church to power. The ceremonies and decorations of the churches are arranged to suit the state of society, so as to strike and captivate the mass of the people. Thence she is acquiring her influence again over two divisions of the community: over kings and rulers, because they need her as a means of government; and over the mass of the lower orders, because she is so arranged in her external ceremonies as to strike and gratify the senses, and so adapted by her sacraments, particularly of penance, and her doctrine of purgatury, as to assure to the ear, after auricular confession, the pardon of sin, and the hope of escape in the next world, if not quite successful in this. While in England she is acquiring great influence, by greatly multiplying and expanding her external machinery, such as fine churches and cathedrals, schools and colleges, and the residence of many missionary priests; secondly, by the strange approximation of many of the clergy of the establishment to what is essential to Catholicism; but, most of all, by the too equal division of Whigs and Tories, so as to give the balance of power, during the last Administration, very much to the Catholic party represented by Mr. O'Coonell; and when we remember that the religious faith of a Catholic is superior to his political opinions, while, on the contrary, the liberal faith of a Protestant is subordinate to his political opinions, we shall see the true power and position of the Catholic Church in affairs of government where there are popular elections. I must in justice add another element of power in which, as a Christian, I rejoice. I refer to the increased morality and respectability of the clergy.

While the Church is acquiring power and influence with sovereigns and kings, and with the masses of people, the educated and intelligent portion of the community are much better affected towards her than they were fifty or hundred years ago, considering her purely as a religious institution, involving faith and morals simply; but they have an invincible aversion towards her as an external institution acting on society as such, because she effectually destroys the hope of liberty, or the spread of liberal principles, which this middle intelligent class in Europe cherish almost exclusively. The result is, this class is neutralized in decidedly Catholic countries, and the nobility are declining in influence and also in numbers, because the sovereign fears them and approximates the people by the intervention of the Church, which sympathizes with the highest and the lowest portions of the community on the continent, but not with the middle intelligent class. This is the true position of the Catholic Church at this time in decidedly Catholic countries, as in Italy and Austria; and imperceptibly increasing in semi-Catholic countries, even where the Governments are Protestant. My remarks do not apply to Russia, Norway, or Sweden, as I have not visited them, and scarcely to Spain, in her present agitated condition.

With respect to England, I have satisfied myself that she is the richest, wisest, and greatest nation in the world; but that she exhibits the extremes of poverty and wealth, destitution and comfort, depravity and virtue, more strikingly than any other people on earth. She has acquired her maximum of dominion and power, but, having a strong and well-established Government, she will long maintain her ascendancy. Much of her success is to be ascribed to the character of her people; the Anglo-Saxons have always been eminent for enterprise and utility: hence, while France is speculative, and discovers great principles, and is content simply with their discovery, England applies them in practice, which renders them productive; and while Germany is metaphysical, and suggests splendid thoughts and theories, England holds fast what ages of good sense have settled in morals and theology. But I have said England has attained her maximum of wealth and power. This will appear, when we consider her external and internal history since the commencement of this century. Fifty years ago machinery was scarcely used at all to produce manufactures, and England was the only nation that possessed it and the skill to use it. Upon the pacification of Europe in 1815, the continental nations were exhausted by the long and destructive wars of Napoleon, while England's soil had not tasted one drop of blood. The consequence was, she immediately became the manufacturer for the world; and the distribution of her goods vastly augmented her mercantile marine and extended her commerce. Of course, all nations sent their coin to her to buy her manufactures, which they could not produce for want of machinery, skill, and hands; the first two of which England prohibited from leaving her soil, and the latter remained with her because it was for their interest. When the continental nations and the United States also were nearly exhausted of their coin and bullion, and sought to pay England in grain and raw material, she instituted the corn laws, and other customs, to protect her own agricultural interests, and compel money still to flow to her in return for manufactures. This policy continued compelled other nations to institute manufactories also, and, in order to sustain them, to enact tariff laws after the example of England, and the free communication with different nations diffused machinery and mechanical skill, until other nations now have in these respects an equality with England, and in point of cheapness of living and of customs several have the advantage of

These causes operating in England and abread have produced the two following results, which now agitate England and the Continent. In England the manufacturing interest created a new and large population peculiar to itself, so suddenly collected, and so densely and promiscuously crowded and lodged, as to be destructive of health, but more particularly of morals, decency, and frugality. This population required to be fed; and hence the increased consumption of food augmented the demand and raised the rents of land from 25 to 500 per cent. The result is, when trade has failed them, and they are literally starving, they cannot melt away into the agricultural and trading masses, and thus be absorbed and restored, but they must gradually perish until their number shall be reduced to the present demand of trade, and then they may barely live again. But while trade was active the manufacturing population prospered again; but 2s the nations around improved in their productions, less was wanted from England; and their success exceeding their own expectations, they very naturally conceived the idea of reducing her wealth, distressing her people, and humbling her power, by excluding her manufactures. The consequence is, France is increasing her tariff, Germany has entered extensively into a national customs union with Prussia at its head; and the United States, by necessity, has been obliged to increase the tariff, and must continue it, even if against her will; and the consequence is an unprecedented falling off in English exportation of manufactured goods, and a distress among her laboring pepulation that has no parallel on earth. All and more than I have said may be fully proved by the "Report on the Condition of the Laboring Poor," published by authority of the House of Commons, July, 1842.

BOBERTSON & RICH'S Improved SALAMANDER BOOK SAFES.—In a recent notice of "Wilder's Fire Proof Salamander Safes" by the agent it is stated that they are the only Safe deserving the name &c." Upon this statement I take issue before the public and offer as evidence the following affidavit:

public and offer a sevidence the following affidavit:

STATL OF NEW-YORK.

City and County of New-York.

Statle of New-York, State of Steams and Almon Roff, being duly sworn, do depose and say, that they were for several months, employed in the Iron Safe Manufactory of Enos Wilder, the said John G. Steams as Foreman of the establishment and the said Almon Roff as Locksmith—that they are intimately and thoroughly acquainted with the materials used, and the manner in which the Safes of the said Wilder were made, and being now employed in the Saiamander Safe Manufactory of Messr. Robertson & Rich at the corner of Attorney and Rivington-streets, do hereby certify that the Safes made by them are composed of the same materials and made in the same manner as those of Wilder's, with the addition of a substance recently discovered which renders them free from damp-ner as those of winders, white renders them free from damp-recently discovered which renders them free from damp-ness—that they are in all respects equal to Wilder's, and not liable to injure their contents by dampness. Signed, JOHN G. STEARNS, ALMON ROFF.

ALMON ROFF.

Sworn before me this 9th day of August, 1842.

Signed. FREDRICK R. LEE, A'd. 17th Ward.

*J. Stearns was in his employ two and one half years, and Almon Roff for eleven months.

By this testimony it is shown that Robertson & Rich's Improved Salaonander Safe is equally as fire proof as Wilder's, and further, that it is superior in the fact that it is free from dampness. And for further testimony I would refer to the following firms who have purchased the Improved Salamonder: J. G. Winter, R. W. Milbank & Co. H. O. Andrews

Examination of Samuel Thompson.-Examinant says he Esomeration of Samuel Thompson.—Examinant says he is nineteen years old on the 24 in day of February next; that he is an apprentice to Joseph Gould, at the brush making business; that he has been entrusted by Mr. Gould in taking goods into the country and selling the same; that on his return, said apprentice says that he has not in all in-stances made a true and faithful statement of the goods sold and moneys received; that sometimes he has charged persons with goods that bought none, and that, too, when the goods were left at other stores; that in some instances persons with goods that bought none, and that, no, when the goods were left at other stores; that it is ome instances the goods were sold by the persons with whom they were left, and the money paid to him; that the money thus paid to him he brought home and paid to Mr. Gould; the goods so left and unsold have sometimes been brought home, sometimes taken and sold at other places. Said apprentice says that he has kept money which he did not render up to Mr. Gould; he says perhaps a dozen or fifteen times; the highest amount ever kept at any one time was three dollars; that he has not at this time any maney in possession; has none laid by, nor has he lent out any; that the money he kept back was by him spent, sometimes for one thing, sometimes for another; that he has paid some three or four dollars to the livery stables. Said apprentice says he is confident he has not taken of his master's money to the amount of forty dollars; he says he supposes it may amount to thirty dollars. He says that the reason why he charged people with goods when they were left at other places was that he wished not to fetch them home, and intended to sell them when he went out again. Said examisant further says, that he may have paid his mother and sister five dollars for services they rendered him; that he had no means of getting mousey but what he got of his master; he says he may have sold four hundred dollars' worth of goods under price; sometimes sold goods under price to get urde; sometimes god shad been overed early not carried in time, may have sold four hundred dollars' worth of goods under price; sometimes sold goods under price to get trade; sometimes goods had been ordered, and not carried in time, were, on account thereof, sold under price. Supposes the loss to his master on goods sold by him under price may be about seventy or eighty dollars. One bag of coffee lies at Mr. Lang's grocery at Rabway, (lower Rabway;) also see box of goods left in New-Yerk—at 119 Seventeenth-tract be thinks. Has no due bills or other accounts to collect in his possession; that at one time he took two shillings out of the drawer, and never took any at any other time, unless it was drawer, and never took any at any other time, unless it was once he took a dellar out to pay for a borse to go to Belville. And farther examinant saith not.
